ASPHALT PAVING

The Before and After Surface

Asphalt paving—as an access road or strip—permits vehicles or equipment to use construction sites at the start of the project.

Modern, full-depth asphalt is the only kind of paving material that can serve building contractors and their customers before and during building construction, as well as after completion.

How? Well, asphalt paving—as an access road or strip—permits vehicles and equipment to get into and use construction sites right at the start of the project. This kind of paving is called “stage construction.” And usually it involves:

From the start of the project, an asphalt paving mat supports trucks, cars, and equipment as they move in and out of the project site. It enables construction to continue, even in bad weather. If it is a road or highway job, traffic can use the paving even before final completion.

After its temporary service during the construction period the initial layers of asphalt paving are easily and effectively converted into a permanent surface for the use intended. Usually, the original courses of asphalt paving serve as a base for additional layers of asphaltic material, thus providing a full-depth surface to serve present and future needs.

Yes, asphalt is economical, dependable, and versatile. It's the only surface that's with you from the start of your construction work through its completion—and still with you, serving your needs, many years into the future.

After its temporary service during construction, the layers of asphalt are converted into a permanent surface for the intended use.

More than a Muddy Ditch and Hammer.

A lot of people still think of the Construction Industry as digging ditches and working in mud. But the truth is that construction is the largest single industry in America. We add more to the wealth of the nation every year than any other business.

We have some of the largest and most sophisticated machines and equipment ever made. Machines that, when combined with the skill and knowledge of constructors, can make a plot of ground and a pile of materials into a building that stands as a monument to man's greatness.

As methods of construction have changed the Construction Industry has changed. We're no longer just a group of carpenters and masons, but mechanical engineers, computer operators, supply distribution managers and executives on all levels.

The Virginia Branch of the AGC is made up of General Contractors. The men whose business it is to build a new Virginia and a new America. Skilled members of a proud profession. The Construction Industry.

The Virginia Branch of Associated General Contractors of America, Inc.

Tomorrow is. Here.

Here in Newport News.

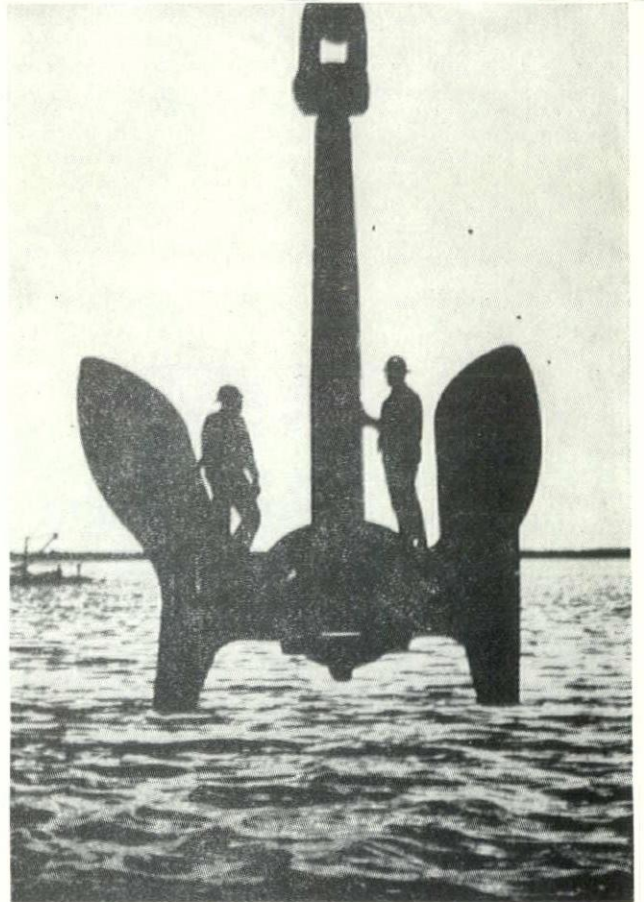

Here in the hands of the people who work here. Because our people are building tomorrow with something that started a long time ago.

A legacy of expertise.

The teamwork, skills and engineering ability that have put together some of the world's most complex technical achievements.

Like the Navy's nuclear powered submarines, aircraft carriers and frigates. The world's most sophisticated commercial ships—liquefied natural gas carriers. And services and components for commercial nuclear power plants.

And when the call comes to go to work on other ideas for the future, we're ready. Because our people are ready. And always have been.

Barnum Lives— On Sunday Afternoons

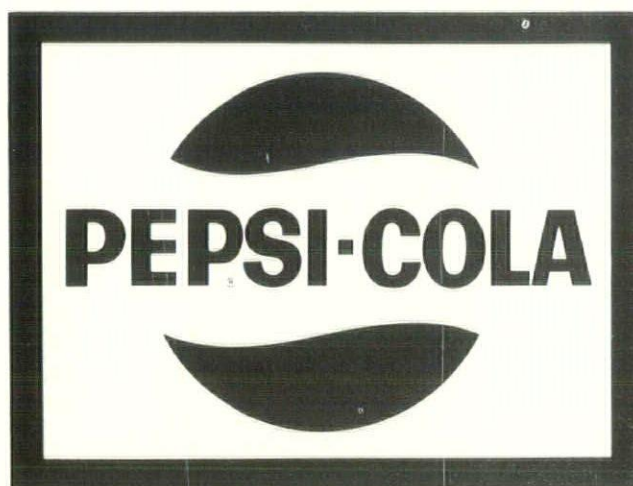

THIS is admittedly a most old-fashioned attitude. Far from representing anything of the currently admired "flexibility," it represents a "closed mind." Having sought for my whole adult life to keep an open mind about most things, this change suggests a prejudice too deeply rooted to be influenced by rationality or objective "fairness." It is, of course a truism that all our prejudices are formed by our personal histories, by our previous conditions in life and the conditions of those with whom we were associated and whom we passed on the way. These previous conditions have developed in me this unshakable prejudice against the demands of the unionized professional football players who struck last season against the National Football League owners and those attitudes and practices which this strike represented in the nation today.

Nothing could be more trivial in itself in the ultimate scheme of things than the bill of demands presented by the 1,400 gladiators, nor the strike which cost millions to the owners from whom the players wanted (among sixty-two other things) more money. In the commonplace tactic of strikers to attack the pocket-book of employers, also considerable disruption is caused in side effects, even to bringing paralysis to the operation of an entire city. Compared to such damage, the disruption of the training schedule of the 26 teams, preparing for their seasons, is small change indeed. However, this punitive action by, of all things, a football players' union can scarcely be viewed among the ultimates of our universe. But it is (in my old fashioned view) some sort of ultimate of the absurd: it is the lunatic extreme of "instant gratification" without a sense of proportion, or a sense of perspective.

This is not to say that all the players' demands are unreasonable. But instant gratification enters an infantile realm of unreality with the insistence upon immediate satisfaction on sixty-three demands, which include more pay, more pensions, less supervision, less restrictions, and the main item of abolition of the Rozelle clause governing a player's right to leave one team, at the expiration of a time-contract, for another.

At present, the team to which the player changes his allegiance must compensate the team he is leaving with a player under the arbitrary powers of Commissioner Rozelle. On the face of it, although many satisfactory trades are made for discontented players without invoking this clause, the Rozelle rule does seem to favor the owners. On the owners' side, they claim that if players could move freely from team to team, not only would the structure of all teams be endangered but the richest teams, those who could pay the highest salaries, would get the top talent and the poorest would get the left-overs. The way in which a few name players have jumped at the dazzling offers of the new World League indicates this might not be a vain fear.

Since the season ended, a Federal judge has ruled that the Rozelle rule is invalid, illegal, and that in the future players shall be free to shop around after playing out their option. The owners will appeal this ruling to higher courts, and probably no final decision will be made this year. For now then, the players' union still regards elimination of the Rozelle rule as central to (Continued on page 113)

Look out for our roots.

Underground phone cables. But it's hard to know where they are. Or aren't. And if you're digging, you could accidentally cut some.

Then everything stops. A lot of phone service. And your crew.

So find out where underground phone cables are, before you dig. After all, our roots keep a lot of phones alive.

Before you dig, call us.

Super Tree.

Believe it or not, this tiny seedling will be the parent of a whole forest of stronger, healthier trees. Super trees, as they are called by forest geneticists. They're a result of Chesapeake Corporation's forest genetics program.

By grafting cuttings from a superior tree onto a sturdy normal tree, such as this seedling and thereafter controlling pollination, it will produce seed with all the characteristics of the super tree.

Chesapeake's foresters are constantly working to develop new methods for growing superior trees. For we at Chesapeake believe in the forests. They have to be protected and wisely used to supply man with his growing needs.

Forest genetics. Just another way Chesapeake is working with nature to serve man.

There are larger steel fabricators. (But not many of them!)

Bristol Steel is up to an annual capacity of 120,000 tons from its five plants in Bristol and Richmond, Va., and in Bessemer, Ala. That's a 400% growth in about 12 years. Who knows what will happen in the their position on "freedom." As their strike slogan had it, "No Freedom, no Football." Claiming that employees in other lines of work are free to change employers, the players insist that they be "treated like other people."

George Halas had a comment on that, which was echoed by several players who were not in thrall to the union. Halas, the owner and founder of the Chicago Bears, whom he coached for many years, has to be regarded as one of the founding fathers of the fifty-year-old National Football League and one of the very few who nurtured the league during its lean early years. From his own unique experience as player, coach and owner, reaching back to the days when pro football was an ill-paying, financially hazardous livelihood, Halas stated flatly that "football players are not like other people."

From the outset, Halas explained, football players were favored over their fellows by being sought out in high school to be the recipients of a free college education in exchange for doing something they liked—playing football. (Students who like to read, for instance, are not sought out to the tune of thirty or forty a year per institution to be the recipients of scholarships in exchange for reading.) The educational aspect of their athletic contract, called a "grant-in-aid," might at best be meaningless and at worst a nuisance to be put up with; but, excluding the outright football factories, at most colleges the opportunity is there and many athletes take advantage of it.

However they might take the educational aspect of their indenture, those aiming at the graduate level of pro football get four years of expert training and experience, along with exposure of their wares to the scouts representing the commercialized firms which present the spectaculars in violence and specialized physical skills for Sunday afternoon entertainment. Those outstanding and/or colorful athletes in college also get a free publicity "coverage" that opens them to all sorts of quick-money opportunities as well as lucrative contracts in the pro league, along with cashable favors from the jock-sniffers among the alumni. To repeat George Halas, these are not like other people, and their dissimilarity from the average is only widened when they become forthright professional players.

Now paid salaries for continuing to do what they want, their work at a kid's game occupies them only one-half of the year. Of these salaries, the players' defense points out that the public hears of the $100,000 and more yearly pay of the publicized stars, but less heralded players get as little as $15,000 a year to start. In addition to this beginning base pay, many players have incentive clauses in their contracts which offer extra sums for performance; and on six of the teams each year every player, including the marginal first-year men, gets a "bonus" for appearing in the play-offs (even if he never leaves the bench during the game), with something like $25,000 going to the ultimate winners. Even without extras, $15,000 for a half-year's work for a beginner is not too bad when considered that it is almost, and sometimes actually, twice as much as is paid to teachers and librarians (those entrusted with the nation's education), who have not received a free college education, who have added graduate work to their apprenticeship and few of whom hope to reach $15,000 a year in their lifetime.

The players' obvious answer to comparative salaries is that their careers are brief. The average playing-life of a running back is scarcely five years. But running backs occupy only two of the twenty-two starting positions on a pro team. At the glamorous position of quarterback, men perform into middle-age. Sonny Jurgenson is getting his $100,000 plus from the Washington Redskins at 40, though he hobbles like a fugitive from Medicare; the legendary John Unitas extracted half-a-million dollars from the San Diego Chargers for his name in his 40th and 41st years, although he played little and that ineptly in the first of his two-year contract and none in the second. Gray-haired George Blanda is still kicking at 47 for the San Diego Chargers and, as he is into his third decade of pro football, has been active longer than the twenty years' service at which policemen, among other workers, wish to retire on their pensions.

The players, however, want not only high wages because of their brief careers but pensions also because of their brief careers. As of now, they get something over $800 a month at age fifty-five, a big jump above the Social Security payments that go to those at sixty-five who have been taxed for this pension for much of their lifetime. Even so, the players are far from satisfied with their pensions, as increases and new arrangements constitute part of their demands on the owners.

In making these demands through a union, which the players threaten will become stronger and more punitive, the athletes do not wish to appear merely greedy and discontented with their lot. With somewhat naive sophistry and quite bald hypocrisy, they've based their demands on such abstract causes as "freedom" and "dignity."

But their freedom, for instance, does not extend to all the players, since the union is demanding a closed shop, which would deny a livelihood through professional football to non-joiners—even though several players said, for publication, during the strike that they thought a union was a fine thing for mill-workers and teamsters but not for football players.

Their abstraction for dignity is even more exclusive: no player who performed before 1959 is eligible for a pension. In other words, only those now performing are worthy of the dignity of being treated as "grown men." As the antithesis of the responsibility that usually accompanies adulthood, this callous act rather illustrates an infantile selfishness.

It is certainly as well known to the current crop of performers as it is to everyone else that they have a game to be paid for playing only because of the men who kept pro football going during the depression years of the '30s and because of those playing during the '50s when television, bringing pro football to growing audiences, led to the wide popularity and the high salaries of today. The 1958 overtime championship game between the Colts and the Giants, often called "the greatest football game of all time," by general agreement was the televised game that brought pro football into its present lucrative eminence. Yet, any player on either of those teams who did not play after that game is excluded from the benefits demanded by the lovers of dignity and justice.

During the Depression, the players were "grateful" to be getting even their low pay—and it was, like all pay in that decade, very low. This idea on gratitude was developed by Sam Baugh, the Texas sharpshooter who, as the top passer of his day, led the Washington Redskins to championship play-offs.

Sid Luckman, who led the Chicago Bears to epic play-offs with Baugh's Redskins, was the prototype of the T-formation quarterback of today. So brilliant that Coach Halas said he was like a coach on the field, Luckman invented the fullback draw off a fake pass during a huddle to nullify the anticipation of Buckets Goldenberg, a Green Bay lineman. Also a great passer, Luckman, like Baugh, was a strong runner, punted and played defense. He had lasting gratitude to the Bears, a notorious skintint outfit.

Baugh and Luckman, along with many of their contemporaries, did not see pro football as a way of life. Baugh is a successful rancher and Luckman a successful businessman. On Luckman's thirty-man Bear team, to my knowledge, one became a doctor and two became dentists, studying during the off-season. This course is still open to the 1,400 gladiators, many of whom do take advantage of their six months off and the contacts available to athletes to develop permanent lines of livelihood. This would seem the behavior of "grown men," to use transitory skills with which they were blessed to prepare for adult life. But the off-season behavior of many of them, even the on-season behavior, suggests something between juvenile delinquency and infantile instant gratification.

Of course, the gratitude for jobs, as felt by the players of the '30s, is a trait now generally in short supply. But even the players of the '50s, while generally better paid than those during the Depression, were low paid laborers compared with those today and had no big prize dangling like the Super Bowl extravaganza. The winners of the east and west divisions played for the league championship, as the Colts-Giants game of 1958. Yet, coaches and players who have survived from the old regimes remark on the resistance to discipline of current players compared to those of the '50s who, expecting less from the game, brought more to the game.

An example of today's high expectations and low gratitude is a running back who escaped from a big city ghetto by a grant-in-aid to a distant cow college. There his football performance, attracting no national publicity, was solid enough to get him drafted on the 8th round—or after approximately 200 other players had been chosen. By chance he came in 1969 to a team desperately off for running backs and under the first year's guidance of a great coach with an infectious compulsion to winning. The meticulous coach concentrated on this running back, acquired an experienced fullback for blocking, squeezed the ultimate potential out of an average offensive line and, aided considerably by a strong passing attack to keep the defense from jamming, developed the unknown back into a very good and crowd-pleasing runner. Having neither great speed nor power, this tutored back relied on quickness, balance, an assortment of good moves and, most of all, on aggressive determination.

After this first year, he lost the coach to whom he said he owed everything. But successive coaches built their offense around him, he continued to improve by his intense effort, and in 1972 he was a league-leading ground-gainer and recipient of many honors on a team that went to the play-offs. Through that fourth year of his pro career, this back had spoken for publication of his gratitude to football for getting him out of the ghetto and for the money which provided a decent home for his parents.

Then the next year he demanded a new contract and refused to report to training camp without it. While the exact terms of the new contract he wanted were not revealed, the sum seemed excessive to a management known to pay among the highest salaries in football. The player apparently wanted the equivalent of life security because the pounding he took as a running back would shorten his career. While he undoubtedly took a brutal pounding in running the high number of times he was called in each game, it was the high number of carries that led to his fame; and, of course, the punishment is incident to the headline making position he played. When the contract dispute was finally resolved to the player's dissatisfaction, he reported very late to training camp with the exhibition season already in progress.

Going into an exhibition game with insufficient hardening, he was banged up and played half the season well below his standard of performance. Other things happened. The offensive line-coach had left and his successor did not get the accustomed blocking for the running back out of an essentially average line; the linemen seemed not to try as hard in a general lowering of offensive performance. The team, often lacklustre, did not enjoy a good season and was saved from a bad finish only by the usually stout playing of the defense.

This year, the running back, while out on the strike, said that his attitude had changed since management did not accede to his last year's demands. Until then, he was all gung-ho about team spirit. Now, he said, "it's just a job." Forgotten was his escape from the ghetto, the fortune that brought him to this particular team where a particular coach developed his skills and an offense to showcase him.

Yet, if he (as an example) really wants to be treated like "other people," he might look around at the millions of men and women on taxing jobs who feel, maybe with justice, that they haven't got all they want or deserve from their employers and regard their attitudes. He and his fellows might look at the stat's of industrial workers, 390,000 of whom are crippled annually, 15,000 killed on the job and 100,000 who die from disease. The history of capitalism will show that all employers invariably pay their employees as little as possible, since this is one way that employers gain returns on their capital investment. What seems (in my antiquated view) particularly naive in this players' union is their smouldering resentment that management makes money off them.

If management made no profits off its employees, there would be no incentive for owners to invest their money, nor for the 32,000,000 Americans who, expecting owners to make profits, invest in stocks and bonds in order to share in the profits. As is well known, a large proportion of these investors are people of very modest means, who are often trusting their life-savings to the capitalist system in which they acquired their savings.

In this system, unfortunately, there are many distasteful aspects in many jobs of all kinds and many inequities inflicted by many employers, which the employees accept/endure for the job which provides their livelihood. Among law enforcement officers, an average of more than two a week lose their lives in line of duty.

As mentioned, my prejudices were formed by earlier conditions when, as Sam Baugh said of his illy paid playing during the Depression, we were grateful to have a job. During the Depression, when forced to abandon the work of my choice as a professional writer, I was overwhelmed with gratitude to get a job at a sweat-shop of a magazine publishing company.

The owner was a suave, elegantly mannered gentleman whose rapacious drive toward riches was unencumbered by compassion for his fellow-man. Since, however, he enjoyed the role of grand seigneur, he turned over all his hatchet-work to a young woman who was probably the meanest human being I ever encountered. Starting young as his secretary, the hatchet-person advanced to executive secretary, then to vice-president and, after the grand seigneur's retirement (long after the Depression and after my stint in the galleys) she directed the company in its growth into a major paperback publisher, now including hard-cover publications also.

Evidently very shrewd, this hatchet-person was in my day the grand seigneur's executive officer in pinch-penny policies, which included squeezing dry the talents of the bright young people who could be assembled cheaply in the Depression and which excluded recognizing anyone's right to common humanity. In the cold inhumanity with which she exercised these policies, the hatchet-person would have been at ease in the Nazi high command. Of course, none of us liked working in such conditions, in shoddy cubicles erected in a loft. We actively disliked the hatchet-person and had little respect for the grand seigneur, but to none of us was his work "just a job." Not only were we grateful that a publisher could provide jobs but pride in our work, in ourselves, and ambition for our futures, caused us to strive to excel.

Far from having half-a-year off to prepare for futures beyond the icy eye of the female Simon Legree, we worked half-a-day on Saturday. To prepare for resuming my career as a professional writer, I researched at nights and on what was left of the weekends, and somewhere in there managed to turn out enough saleable stories to build a stake on which to go off and write a novel. Of my close friends in this slave-ship, one became a successful magazine publisher on his own, another became the editor of a national weekly and the third a successful Hollywood screenwriter. I've lost track of the others but one, whom I did not know well, became editor-in-chief of a large magazine and paperback publishing house, and several, whom I've encountered across the years, seem to be doing well enough. Strangely, we never refer to the old place with bitterness, and, if not recalled exactly with affection, our common experience has made a lasting bond between the "alumni."

Needless to say, those employees today whose attitudes are reflected by the game-players cannot be expected to view their livelihoods and opportunities as did those of us who came into adulthood in a time of hardship and want. Yet, the "affluent" times, which formed the attitudes of those now in their twenties and thirties, at present look to be seriously threatened. Certainly no reflective person could expect the "prosperity" of the recent past to last indefinitely. And it is not impossible that we, with the rest of the Western world, might experience another depression, if less severe than the one of the 'thirties. Considering this, considering what is happening in England today caused, among other factors, by irresponsible union demands and the citizens' unrealistic expectations, those of my time cannot help feeling that no lasting good can result from actions entirely for benefits of one group with indifference to consequences to others.

As for pro football itself, as an enthusiastic follower since the simple days of the early 'thirties—when players, owners and fans were mostly in the same boat—I don't think it makes much difference what happens to the present "game" (for want of a better word). Already the quality of play is diluted to the point to recall a television episode of the late '50s. During the so called "golden age" of television drama in the early '50s, Gore Vidal had been one of the leading writers. With the passing of live performances and management's stifling of imaginative dramas, to Vidal's protest, he was told by an adman that the purpose was to keep the entertainment mediocre so it would not compete with the commercials. Pro football is hurrying to give the admen equal satisfaction, as the market is glutted by the greed for and the ease of television money.

The destiny with mediocrity is further sped up by this new World League. A haven for fly-by-night promoters and tax-shelter seekers, who've stocked their teams mostly with National League discards and low draft-choice rookies, this enterprise has shown its "sportsmanship" by luring for next year a scattering of a name players in the NFL whose contracts are up this year. Since the unrealistic sums offered to get these players to jump are as irresponsible to professional football as are the immediate 63 demands of the union players, this whole present version of entertainment (complete with its comedians as television commentators) is so shot with human cupidity and an assumption of the public's stupidity as to resemble more a Barnum enterprise than what was once a fine sport.

Undoubtedly for a while they'll all, players and new owners, prove Barnum's theory: "There's a sucker born every minute." But, as stated earlier, the happening in pro football is in itself unimportant, since the worst has already happened to it. To those who lived through parlous times and fear that an approximation of such times might return, it's the attitude that is distressing.

The reason this is particularly distressing amongst so many other far more portentous happenings is that this once fine game offered, as a relaxing contrast to life's vexations and inconclusiveness, an experience complete unto itself, in which one could be involved and yet uninvolved, from its ritualistic opening to its conclusive end, with the tired warriors leaving the field followed by a few worshipful urchins and the stands slowly emptying under the autumn skies. Now that the field is another arena for a labor-management conflict, another aspect of the unreasonable expectations that are harming America as they have already harmed Britain, it has become another of the American landmarks lost to the price-tag.

When the star running-back says, "It's just a job," to this viewer the game is just the chore of union-laborers whose discontent spreads into the unhealthy atmosphere where instant gratification is all too pervasive. Gone among other cases is that unique enjoyment which made pro football an experience complete unto itself.

The Incredible Shrinking Life Insurance Premium.

Hundreds of Life of Virginia policyowners encountered this awesome phenomenon last year.

They got the news that their Econo-Flex life insurance premiums had been reduced.

Amazing. At a time when just about everything else was going up in cost, something was actually going down.

But then Econo-Flex is an amazing life insurance plan. Each policy is reviewed every three years, and if living costs are up, enabling us to earn more on our investments, we reduce the premium. Just like that.

Ask your Life of Virginia representative about Econo-Flex.

Then maybe one day when you least expect it, you'll encounter the shrinking life insurance premium. As incredible as it may seem.

LIFE OF VIRGINIA

"Even if you're not sure what a credit union is, we want you to know what it isn't."

Some people tell us our name's confusing. They get us mixed up with credit bureaus and labor unions.

A credit bureau we're not.

Credit bureaus keep track of how you pay your bills. They report on your credit rating.

And we aren't a labor union.

Labor unions work with management on wages, working conditions and fringe benefits.

What we are is a credit union.

A credit union is a financial organization. Formed by people with a "common bond." They may work for the same company, live in the same community, or belong to the same group. They save money together on a regular basis, then loan that money to each other at favorable interest rates.

A credit union is owned by its members and run by its members. It's not in business to make a profit, but to help people. Take it from a member. It's worth looking into.

For more information about credit unions in your area, write Virginia Credit Union League, P.O. Box 375, Lynchburg, Virginia 24505.

Join your credit union.
It's where you belong.
